Situating Foucault: Outline

I. Post 1968 French philosophy:
   A. post-phenomenological: Levinas, Derrida, Irigaray
   B. post-structuralist: Foucault, Deleuze/Guattari

II. Phenomenology
   A. Predecessors:
      1. Kant: transcendental field: categorial conditions of possibility of experience
      2. Hegel: totalized and historicized transcendental field
   B. German phenomenology
      1. Husserl [early]: intellectualized; intentionality
      2. Heidegger [early]: personal and practical existence
      3. Heidegger [middle]: epochal "history of Being": basic words of philosophy
   C. French phenomenology
      1. Sartre: intellectual
      2. Merleau-Ponty: embodied and practical
      3. Beauvoir: gendered embodiment

III. Post-Phenomenology
   A. Levinas: ethical infinite alterity: face of the other
   B. Derrida: différance: differing and deferring; remainder, cinders
   C. Irigaray: feminine imaginary: duality, fluidity; ethics of sexual difference

IV. Structuralism
   B. hallmarks: wholeness, transformation, self-regulation; reduction of history
   C. Levi-Strauss: unconscious conceptual structure of societies; "Kant w/o TUA"

V. Post-structuralism
   A. Historical-libidinal materialism: the study of bodies politic
   B. 19th and 20th C German Predecessors:
      1. Marx
      2. Nietzsche
      3. Freud
   C. 20th C French Predecessors
      1. Kojeve
      2. Hyppolite
      3. Bataille
   D. The birth of post-structuralism in the 1960s
      1. Deleuze: Nietzsche and Philosophy (1962)
      2. The events of May 1968
      3. The MLF born of 1968: Questions feministes; Psych et po
      4. Anti-Oedipus (1972)
      5. The wonder years 1974-76
Brief Comments on Situating Foucault

RE: phenomenology. Foucault is resolutely anti-phenomenological. His early work explicitly turns from the study of subjectivity to the study of cultural systems. He never bothers with studying how a constituted subject comes to know something, but concentrates on the conceptual structures that allow subjects to know. His later work on subjectivizing practices is an outside-in study of material (discursive and non-discursive) practices that produce different forms of subjectivity in different historical circumstances, rather than an inside-out study of the allegedly self-constituting history of a concrete subjectivity (what Husserl would call genetic phenomenology).

RE: structuralism. There is some truth in seeing Foucault's pre-1970 archaeologies as quasi-structuralist. It's true he never used mathematical models of a network of binary differences, but his notion of a "historical a priori" that governs the discourses of a period, the "positive unconscious" forming the condition of possibility of the experience of an age, seems very close to the general thrust of structuralist anthropology.

RE: post-structuralism. The two major works of the mid-70s, DP and HS 1, are clearly historical-libidinal materialist, by my definition of the study of the production of bodies politic. There's a way in which, though I won't be able to show it in this course, Deleuze/Guattari and Foucault are something like the theory and practice of historical libidinal materialism. I don't mean to say by this that Foucault merely applied the insights of D/G: the mutual influence is much more complicated than that. Nonetheless, the vast sweep of ATP and the excruciating detail of DP do seem to suggest something like the following: D/G provide the concepts, and Foucault the examples, for future hist-lib-mat work.